From present appearances the Valparaiso Bank failure in Valparaiso, Nebraska, is the most gigantic swindle and defalcation ever known in that quarter. It develops that scoville, one of its owners, has altered many of the notes payable to the bank, making the amounts much more than they originally were, and that he then deposited the notes with other banks as collateral for money with which to speculate. Notes which were paid, and which should have been cancelled, have been used in the same manner. Scoville and Crafts, after swindling the business men of the town and their friends out of as much money as possible, suddenly decamped, and it is thought they are in Canada.

The matter became known to the officers of the bank three or four weeks ago, and they put on a detective with the above result. Lewis has made a written confession which the bank officers decline to make public. The detective gained Lewis' confidence by representing himself as a professional crock. Lewis met him by appointment, and received from him a lot of good money which he supposed was counterfeit. Lewis gave his supposed would be used in getting $30,000 from the bank's New York correspondents.

Let a the last will and testament of Choure W. Hall, late of Mt. Vernon, in said county, doceased, having been presented for probate:

ORDERED, That notice thereof be given three weeks successively prior to the second Monday of Documber next, in the Maine Farmer, a newspaper weeks successively and persons interested may attend the country of the said of of t They are each placed at the head of the seven great departments into which the exceutive business of the government has been divided. Their business is to aid the President in carrying out the policy of the administration; and hence these several departments became political as well as business offices. To these belong the affairs of State, of the carriage of the malis, of foreign relations, of the navy, of matters of war. But while the above are in the strictest sense business affairs, as well as political affairs, they are therefore exceedingly foreign to, and have nothing to do with the interests and affairs of agriculture.

These arguments are so narrow, and so utterly fall to comprehend the importance the incommendation of the commendation of the comm for and established all the departments now presided over by cabinet officers, that we are forced to call attention to their weakness. The claim that "the farmers generally would be better satisfied to have the ally would be better satisfied to have the department of agriculture remain where it now is," shows that our cotemporary is not booked up in the agricultural sentiment of the country, which fact probably is sufficient to account for its taking the position it does. The call for a secretary of agriculture in the cabinet comes from the farmers, and it has been loudly and emphatically pronounced from nearly avery State in the Union, and without distinction of political party; and up to the present hour without outspoken opposition, or objection even, from among the ranks where it originated. Certainly under our form of government, no one can say but the same of the long of the present hour without outspoken opposition, or objection even, from among the ranks where it originated. Certainly under our form of government, no one can say ranks where it originated. Certainly under our form of government, no one can say but the representatives of agriculture in the country are numerous enough to have their unquestioned demands respected. The classification of our agriculture—a business which is the recognized basis of the prosperity and the wealth of the nation, which furnishes the daily food to our

The classification of our agriculture—abusiness which is the recognized basis of the prosperity and the wealth of the nation, which furnishes the daily food to our sixty millions of people, and then has a surplus left sufficient to make up more than three-fourths of the entire exportations from the country,—with the coast survey and pension department, and then raising the question of "what well wisher of the country would want to see the executive cabinet lumbered up with the affairs of these minor bureaus," certainly shows a surprising absence of appreciation of both the extent and the importance of our agriculture. Agriculture cannot be classified among the "minor bureaus," when we comprehend the fact that without it no coast survey would have been called for, and that without the homes to defend which agriculture has brought into existence, no pensions would have been due, no nary would have had anything to guard, no army anything to defend. True it is the business of the even great departments into which the exceutive business has heretofore been divided "fo ald the President in carrying out the policy of the administration," but the farmers of the country believe that that interest which is the foundation of the government; likelf has a right to avoice in the salministration. They claim that agriculture has so and that the "many" and "matters of war" are for the prolicy of the administration. They claim that agriculture has so may be administration. They claim that agriculture has on the policy of the administration. They claim that agriculture has a common with those of lesser inportance. We do not see how any candid parson can quection this. A recognition of these relations is what they are now asking for. The winter meeting of the Connecticut and we cannot borry. December 11th to 13th. The leading topics, around which the lectures and distopics, around which the sectures and discussions will center, are to be the experiment stations and their work, and co-operative dairying. Mr. Gold, the Secretary, is eminently successful in drawing the best authorities among us to his assistance at these meetings.

Prof. Rogers of the State College, who therefore, to be Prof. Rogers of the State College, who has been traveling in Europe since last June, arrived home last week. His tour extended through England, Scotland, Germany, France and Italy, and was made largely through the country towns, instead of the large cities usually frequented by travelers. He came home more than ever impressed with the unparalleled advantages of his own country and its government.

impressed with the unparalleled advantages of his own country and its government.

The Lististon Journal joins the Farmer in urging more attention to dairying in our State, as the specialty which promises prompt and substantial returns for intelligent effort vigorously and faithfully put forth, and it urges that State aid be directed to the support of special schools for instruction in dairy practice. This is the right ring. Now let the State Grange be heard. The board of agriculture long ago took the initiative. There is no need that our young men go to Iows to engage in dairying. We must ask the State to come to our aid. Cows have to be fed in winter anyhow. Why not have them give a good flow of milk at that time, and thus realize an income all the while? Steers must have their daily rations. Why not keep them growing every day, and thus get something for their keep? Pigs can be carried through the winter on apples or other like cheap food. Why not feed better, and by so doing get something for it. This feeding to live neither makes the animal nor the owner thrive. Agriculture in the Cabinet.

A statement was made a few weeks since thousand dollar A statement was made a few weeks since of the standing of the bill before congress, creating a department of agriculture, to be presided over by a secretary of agriculture who should be a member of the cabinet. who should be a member of the cabinet. ment in defence of the position it takes. The Journal says:

The great agricultural interests of the country are now well represented by the department of agriculture, which was never better organized or better administered than it has been since its powers were enlarged. Many of its divisions are in the hands of expert scientists, whose work, while greatly benefitting our agriculture, is not of a nature that carries it into the technical business of the administration, has been occur. technical business of the administration, where we think it has no place. To take the practical and scientific business of agriculture, now well administered by an independent described to the control of the control riculture, now well administered by an independent department entirely belitting its nature and scope, from where it is, and put it into the cabinet, would be to attach to the office objectionable features which would hamper and retard, rather than aid its legitimate work. Why should not the coast survey, the pension department, or the land office be made cabinet positions, with as much or more propriety?—yet what well wisher of the country would want to see the executive cabinet lumbered up with the affairs of these minor bureaus, now well taken care of in their subordinate divisions? We believe farmers generally would be better satisfied to have the department of agriculture remain where it now is, rather than have it put into the turnoil of cabinet administration. Members of the President's cabinet are his trusted and confidential advisers and counselors.
